About the Summit

The First Nations National School Food Summit aims to showcase current practices, approaches, and challenges in delivering food programs in First Nations schools. Held at the sacred site of Wanuskewin, participants will develop a greater understanding of how First Nations school food programs operate, the barriers and solutions that already exist, and the diverse cultural practices surrounding them. The key activities of the summit will be included in an AFN First Nations School Food Program Report to advance the AFN's advocacy for adequately funded school food programs that meet First Nations' real needs.
